ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Acknowledgments are used to give thanks and credit to individuals who have helped the author reach the culmination of his or her graduate degree. Mentors, committee members, relatives, friends, and other colleagues may be mentioned.

Acknowledgments may also be used to give credit to the publisher of an author's work and to show appreciation for grants, equipment, materials, and so forth.

ABSTRACT

The text of the abstract begins here. You may select this text and replace it with your own. The abstract counts as page iii, but as for all other pages with main headings (titles in all capital letters), you should not show the page number on it. The abstract is a required component of the thesis or dissertation, even in cases where individual chapters have their own abstracts. The abstract should be a concise, carefully composed summary of the contents of the thesis or dissertation in which the inquiry is defined, the research method and design are described, and the results and conclusions are summarized.

There should be no more than 250 words in the abstract and must contain only one paragraph, which will normally fill about one and a half pages. The abstract should not include any diagrams, citations, illustrations, or subheadings. Abstracts are generally written in passive voice and emphasize the main points of an argument. Do not spend time discussing dissentions or supplemental information to your research; rather, express the entirety of your dissertation or thesis project in a well-organized way.
